Ergot alkaloids are a large group of compounds, comprising more than 40 highly biologically active molecules [1, 2, 3], produced by microfungi belonging to the genus Claviceps and relative species [4]. Chemically, these molecules share a four-membered ring—ergoline—known to interact with neurotransmitter receptors.

Bromocriptine and lergotril, as well as other tested DH-ergot alkaloids and neuroleptics, compete for the binding of the α -antagonist H 3 -WB-4101 to rat cerebral cortical membranes. The displacing potencies of the tested DH-ergot alkaloids and of the neuroleptics indicate that they have a high affinity for the α -adrenoreceptors in the CNS.
