None of Hawaii's treasured shorelines are quite as untouched as those of Ni'ihau, known to locals and foreigners as the "Forbidden Island.". Even though it's so close to modern civilization, in 2018, there are still no roads or running water, and the village runs solely on solar-powered electricity. On Ni'ihau, islanders speak their traditional dialect of Hawaiian, and the entire island operates in a completely self-sustainable way by growing, foraging, and hunting for their own ...
