The Urban Food Revolution Changing

Toronto food activist and author Wayne Roberts (The No-Nonsense Guide to World Food) has been rightfully critical of the premature celebration of a food "revolution". The current good food zeitgeist is still more about planting seeds of change than reaping large harvests. That isn't to say that cities around the world aren't sprouting "good food" initiatives too numerous to count, as the benefits of more people eating more local, fresh plant-based food take root: tastier food ...
